

We were going down the runway
and I noticed the plane skimming
and I thought it was not normal.
The next thing we were skidding out of control. I saw it hit the orange barrier and a wheel was knocked off.
We came to a sudden stop and we waited for the pilot to open the door and we all got off safely.

After we boarded the plane we waited on the runway and the pilot seemed to be revving the engines. It was very hot on the plane.

After we were going down the runway the plane was shaking. We were starting to lift off and the plane seemed to go up and come back down. I then knew the plane was out of control and we could not stop. We hit the light barrier and I then saw two trees roll past. We then came to a stop. We waited until the pilot opened the door and we were so lucky to all get out without any injuries.

As we taxied down the runway I was seated on the lt. with my back to the pilot's. I feel we never lifted off of the ground or had enough speed as the landscape was not moving as fast as I feel is usual.

I also feel that my mind was telling me it was O.K. when my gut said it wasn't.

I dimly then remember asking to get us off and when I saw the pilot coming back to open the door it was just a non panic exit.

Once off, the thought was watching the pilot who was crying and obviously upset.

We waited and waited to take off.
I was on the seat over the toilet so I saw nothing but felt the plane start skidding and was told open the door, but by that time the pilot was back at the door opening it. I was the first out but did not realize how serious it was until I looked at the plane
