The Plane came in from the Northwest to land
The wings waved a little in the cross wind
The Plane touched down and bounced back into the air The plane came down again, bounced again this time with the right wing tipped to the sky.

The pilot brought it back down again and it stayed on the ground but off the east side of the runway and ended up in the corn stalks field.

It was slowed quite a bit at this time and then dust and stalks flew as it throttle back up.

The plane was headed to the southeast as he was trying to become airborne again.

The stalks were keeping him from getting much speed going. He then lifted off the ground at about the top of the hill in the field. The plane's right wing was ripped off when he hit the wires the plane nose dived into the ground and burst into flames
