

Ok , the plane was a little harder to start early that morning but it was colder. When running it ran real good , sounded good took off good. The walk around was all good. So Larry and I were landing from south to north. As we touched down on the pavement all was good and as that plane likes to fly Larry had to push the yoke fwd so the front wheel would make contact with the ground and at that point the plane started to veer to the left and then off of the payment and onto the grass, so then we are headed to the fence and he ask me if I was on the pedals, and I said no. Larry then said something is wrong and I can't slow it down and he had his hand on the throttle control. The next thing I seen we were going to hit the fence and the left wing hit and in the next second Larry was laying on the ground on the right side of the plane at the landing gear wheel. Then I got out of his side of the plane and tried to the help him.

Amendment to my original statement, Larry never has liked wearing his seat belt ever since Mr. West died in his plane. When it burned and he couldn't get out because of the seatbelt. So with that said Larry wouldn't wear his seatbelt in anything he was in. He didn't have it on this time and the outcome could have been different than it was.
