DIGEST

"I took off from N6 to almost Princeton, where one of my jobs is ready for me to finish. From there I went to another job in Sayreville. It's easier to check jobs from the airplane than it is from a car. Uh, that was by the Raritan bay. And from there I went down across Keyport, across the Earl section of the bay I took a ride around Rumson, went down to Spring Lake, turned west and headed back home. To my surprise, no noise, no sputter, no banging, no nothing, just slowed down. Flying at about 1,200 feet. Any higher and I can't see what I'm looking at. Can't tell whether the jobs are done or not. I tried to land on a horse track, but as I turned around the altitude was too high, but not high enough to make another revolution at the track. Would've been in the trees. So I brought it in and came into the field. As I came into the field, I'm running out of ground, so I made a left hand turn. I wasn't able to pull back fast enough and flatten it out level again before hitting ground. Hit at an angle."
