Subject: FW: Tuft of Feathers details
Importance: High

Zoe,

Below you will see an email from an instructor who was a part of our “cleanup crew” post-crash post-NTSB site examination. After reading the factual report he remembered seeing a tuft of feathers. He also spoke with the other men who were present and they also recalled it. It sounded like at the time they didn’t think anything of it since they were in the middle of a field. I thought I should pass along this information to you.

Please let me know if you have any questions or would like any more information.

Thanks,

Ian

Kerrigan,

I (Swanson) was recently reading the NTSB factual findings and distinctly remembered finding a tuft of feathers at the point of impact. I talked with both Joel Powell and Jonathan Schmidt as all three of us were sifting thru the debris at the point of impact and they both remember it.

- The tuft contained what appeared to be short feathers (white and lite grey in color).
- The tuft was no larger in size than a golf ball with small feathers intermingled.
- The tuft was bloody and appeared to contain some type of soft material within the center.
- We do not specifically remember keeping it as there was so much that was recovered and sent off to the NTSB.

I hope these details help. This is all we can distinctly remember. Please let me know if you have any further questions.

In Him,
Daniel
